development business, at all. But this is not true anymore, and Appomattox County has been one of the pioneers in changing this pattern in Virginia.

"You have a real success story to tell here. We use you and your group as a model for the other rural localities in Virginia to follow when they ask our Division people about industrial development and how they should go about it in their communities." He congratulated the group of Appomattox citizens who put the program together here."

Burtnea added that another vital area in which Appomattox County is a pace setter is in the field of Vocational Education Training as the country could be heading towards an oversupply of persons with four years or more of college education and a shortage of energetic, intelligent young people for manual jobs. "They tell us that 65% of our young people coming along today", he continued, "will be going into jobs that do not require education beyond high school . . . jobs for clerical workers, craftsmen, operators, sales and service employees, and laborers - in other words, jobs that do not require a college education". The projected needs of Virginia will still call for at least 48,000 new jobs each year.

Appomattox, think, has become the envy of some rural localities in Virginia in other ways, too . . . and this centers around the experience of your present industrial employers", he added.

In closing Burtnea said that the Division is committed to manufacturing employment as the best means of meeting the future needs of Virginia, a healthy economic growth, a quality of life which is so often determined by the size of our paychecks, a broader tax base for the state and the localities, and full utilization of Virginia's human resources.

Industrial development provides a community with a means of raising the level of its economy, it creates jobs, provides services and facilities for modern living, it provides a way for people to purchase more goods and services at home, and this has been found to be true in Appomattox County.

WESTVACO SALUTES THE AMERICAN TREE FARM PROGRAM AND APPOMATTOX TREE FARMERS

soaring to new highs, no landowner can afford to own idle or lazy forest lands. Tree farming is the means of putting forest land to work growing maximum crops of high-quality forest products.

Tree Farming is not a get-rich-quick proposition, but income from forest land can be doubled or tripled by the adoption of good forest management practices under the Tree Farm concept. Moreover, under the provisons of secitons 631 (a) and (b) of the Internal Revenue Code, the capital gains rate on forest products income is about one-half the rate on ordinary income. Tree Farm practices will increase wildlife populations, particularly those of elk, deer, rabbits, and grouse by providing more food and better habitat. They will also protect your streams and make possible the better manipulation of water yields. They will increase the value of the property, and tree farming operations can be conducted so as to neither destroy the scenic beauty of the forest nor the recreation opportunities.

Interested? Stop by our new Westvaco Office on Court Street in Appomattox. Talk with one of our foresters or drop in and see your county forester about the American Tree Farm System.

DIAMOND WOLRD CHAMPIONSHIP RODEO and support rodeo teams through scholarships as well.

Although the focus is on riding and roping talent, this rodeo also show cases champion livestock. The Finals Rodeo known as the "Rodeo of Champions" because the very best cowboys are pitted against the very best rodeo livestock. Diamond World Championship Rodeo is proud to own several of the broncs and bulls that have made that trip to the Finals. We are especially proud of "Miss Junction," a 7 year old, 1100 pound, palomino that has been ridden the required 8 seconds only 3 times in her career. Last December "Miss Junction" was awarded the most coveted honor of all, the 1975 "Bucking Horse of the Year" award by the top bronc riders. Like all of our animals, "Miss Junction" is fed a special diet and is kept in peak condition; our animals are too valuable to be mistreated. The Diamond Rodeo Company ranch is located near Charlottesville, Va. at the foot of the Blue Ridge Mountains. Our ranch staff breeds champion rodeo livestock and also deals in commercial beef cattle. Our rodeo company, being the only one of its kind on the east coast, produces just less than 60 rodeos yearly in Virginia, Maryland, West Virginia, Kentucky and Ohio.
